Mentoring is an academic relationship with a faculty member from the department of Psychology that educates an undergraduate/potential graduate/graduate student about the theoretical and practical aspects of psychologically-related research by engaging them in actual research and writing process.

I understand and agree to the following mentoring relationship parameters:

- I waive my right for financial remuneration. This mentorship is not employment.
- I may or may not also be hired as a research assistant in my faculty mentor's lab.
- The data collected belongs to BYU and is not for my unauthorized personal use.
- Although the service I provide as a mentee may benefit the university, this mentorship is primarily for my educational benefit.
- This mentorship may be terminated at any time by either party with or without cause.

I agree to my faculty mentor's expectations, which are as follows:

- I come to lab meetings.
- I carry out procedures as described.
- I contribute to the collection of data.
- I provide data analysis.
- I participate in drafting of the manuscript.

I agree to this mentorship with the expectation that...

- I may qualify for a letter of recommendation from my faculty mentor.
- I hope to gain experience in a research lab.
- I hope to gain practical and theoretical knowledge about the faculty mentor's line of research.
- A publication may follow this research, but there is no guarantee.
